

Carla Cue

Carla Cue is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Pennsylvania and is studying fusion centers and their value to law enforcement. She has been involved in studies focused on policing in the United States. Cue teaches writing skills for undergraduates at the University of Pennsylvania and is presently the Principal Investigator on a study examining the effectiveness of speed humps in residential neighborhoods. Cue brings to her work an analytical perspective that highlights evidence-based policy development. She is on a career path to serve as a policy advisor to a police department CEO. She has a Master of Arts in Criminology from the University of Oxford.
