

Greg Saville

Greg is a former Canadian police officer and is an urban planner specializing in CPTED and SafeGrowth methods. He co-founded the International CPTED Association and in the 1990s was a partner in Canada's first consulting firm to specialize in CPTED. He is co-owner of AlterNation, an international consulting firm dedicated to safer places and helping change agents transform their world for the better. In 2007 he created the SafeGrowth program for neighborhood safety and launched the model at the UN Habitat program in Santiago, Chile as well as SafeGrowth training with the New York based Local Initiatives Support Corporation in cities across the U.S.

After a decade living in Vancouver, British Columbia he was hired to work as a faculty member at Florida State University and in Connecticut at the University of New Haven. Greg's innovative work bringing the best adult learning methods into public safety is exemplified by his federally-funded design and implementation work on the Problem-Based Learning program in several cities.

Saville consults internationally on crime prevention and human behavior. He co-created a new method for diffusing potentially violent incidents called situational conflict resolution. He also co-created a new national police training system that incorporates, for the first time ever, emotional intelligence competencies. He has extensive background in numerous forms of meditation and self-awareness techniques, and has practiced meditation for 20 years.

Saville lives with his wife in the historic Victorian seaport of Port Townsend in the Olympic Peninsula of Washington State.
